ABSTRACT

Both one's social inclusion and one's personal life are badly impacted by gender discrimination. Oppression of women has persisted for a long time. There are many different kinds of gender discrimination. Most women don't know their own rights and freedoms because of this. Fewer enrollments of girls might be caused by gender bias in schools. Girls' enrollment and retention rates are much lower than boys' when looking at the data related to schooling. How many females have is greater for guys than for girls who never attended school. Many people are aware of the reasons why fewer females enroll in and complete secondary school. Gender discrimination thrives in the workplace because of its prominence in social life. Not only can discriminatory practices like the gender wage gap and biased employment choices harm people's financial well-being, but they also help to keep gender-based inequities alive. When people's incomes aren't evenly distributed, it shows up in their access to healthcare, schools, and other basic necessities, which in turn affects social dynamics.
